The International Monetary Fund (IMF) is embarking on a global outreach process to recruit new talent from various countries in the world, especially those which are currently under-represented in its staff. Although the IMF is widely known for recruiting economists, our department (Technology and General Services (TGS)) offers career opportunities in a variety of technical and service areas such as information technology, facilities management, purchasing, and library services. We are seeking to attract experienced professionals from your country in these fields in order to strengthen our diversity base and better serve our member countries. We had contacted your embassy recently to obtain your information, and were informed that you would be the right person to support our initiative.

Enclosed please find a folder containing our job advertisement, which outlines the major career streams we offer in TGS, and some of the unique benefits the IMF offers its employees (information will also be sent via e-mail). This advertisement will be published in local and regional newspapers around the world as well as Internet job boards, and the detailed job postings can be found at www.imf.org/jobs starting November 21, 2008.

We would appreciate any assistance you can provide us in this effort, such as posting our general job advertisement on notice boards, in newsletters, labor offices, media/publications in your country, or any other channels you would use to bring the awareness of these opportunities to your compatriots.

For more information or to discuss options, please contact John Thomas (202-623-6089) or Aiman Kabli (202-623-8997), or email us at TGSJobs@imf.org.

Thank you in advance and I look forward to our mutual cooperation.

Sincerely yours,
